`@[1386161517:2048:Delek] This is about way kore than masks for me. That's such a small potato for me anymore. I don't know why people keep saying Biden won't force vaccinations when both him and Harris have said they believe in in doing that. I agree with the possibility of civil war happening. I can see that too. Unfortunately the only way this is probably capable of being fixed is bloodshed because I'm not so sure our government can be fixed the political way anymore either. I hear all of what you're saying. I don't like either party either. `

Summary

Text When I first watched VoterGate, a documentary about fraud in the voting system, I was considered a conspiracy theorist. Fast forward to 2020 and half my news feed is people posting questionable stats. I'm sitting here thinking about how everyone has been so complacent during COVID. Closing your livelihood businesses without a fight, sending your kids to school (or not) without a fight, wearing your masks like good little boys and girls whether you wanted to or not, closing your churches against your consciousness, literally watching your loved ones die in nursing homes or from not being able to get a surgery done- all without a fight. And now so many of you are complaining on social media about probable fraud in the voting system? You can't complain! Not even one of you that has been complacent should open your mouths! Hang your head in shame and shut your face unless you are going to actively do something. The government knows exactly how far you can be pushed because the population has been successfully tested. They know 99.9% of the people will roll over, belly up, like a bunch of cowards. We are where we are because nobody stands up when they should. Our founding fathers would be rolling over in their graves along with every person who had their blood spilled in order for us to be free. Walk over and look into the mirror, and ask yourself if you're a coward or if you're doing anything to stop the corruption. Are you part of the problem or the cure? Don't bother listing all your excuses in comments.

The government knows how far we can be pushed because the people don't walk free. We roll over like a bunch of chickens. People will complain and not do anything. `

Summary Rachel Powell replied to a comment on Toni Shuppe's post. `@[100000628116328:2048:Wendy] I heard of the lady but have no personal knowledge of her. Patriots aren't ANTIFA so there was no formal plan on patriots part so it was somewhat chaotic but they still got in. `

Rachel Powell commented. `I can't even read this long ass rant. I stopped at armed insurrection. Lol. Nobody was armed there except for police. People write stuff like this and state stuff as fact when it's actually a belief. It would be really nice to see people be truthful and say "I believe blah blah to be true" instead of fueling the fire with false facts. Was Trumps speech even listened to the whole way through? Because he didn't say to attack the Capitol and during a protest in dc its normal to go from freedom plaza to the Capitol for the March. Why didn't I see any long rants a few months ago about the protests when it was antifa and BLM attacking people and such? It's really frustrating to me because, for instance, I have been to some of these things and what the media talks about isnt normally close to what happens. I think both the right and the left both get grossly misrepresented to the other side. The best thing is to just turn the media off. Imo. `

Summary Rachel Powell commented. `What I want to know is what men like Mastriano expect Americans to do. We tried legal routes to ensure a fair election. When there wasn't going to be one, and legal routes were found to be a dead end, the people took/trying to take the Capitol back. What are Americans suppose to do? Sit back and do nothing? Why don't we just start calling the president king? This makes no sense to me. Please, Mastriano, explain WHEN it's ok for the people to fight back? `
